

Mr. PAPILLON'S SPEECH.

I.  HE thanked God for casting his Lot in a place where he did not only enjoy his Friends and Relations, but also the Neighbourhood of so good and godly a place as Dover.

II, He blessed God, that had given them such Hearts, as to own his Service and Worship; and especially at this time, when there is such opposition to Godliness, general Looseness and Profaness amongst us.

III. He thanked God in particular, for that he inclined their Hearts towards him, to make him instrumental in his Generation, for the Restauration of Law and Religion.

IV. He promised to stand firm to the interest of the good people of God in the Nation.

V. He exhorted them to stand firm to their Interest, Priviledges and Himself, and he should stand by them.

Lastly, He promised to pray to God for them, and recommended himself to the Prayers of the good people of Dover.

In a Letter to one Mr. Gibbon, an Attorney in Dover,

HE bewailed the Looseness and Debauchery of the Times, he exhorted all to Temperance and Liberty, he protested not to accept of the Honour of Parliament-Man, with such a burthen of sin as he found occasioned by excessive Drinking: but the great desire to serve his Countrey, especially the Corporation of Dover, did incline him to dispence with his Resolutions so far, that means should be used whereby the good people of Dover might be informed, and made sensible of his Intentions to serve them.
